OVERVIEW

Deanna has an extensive litigation background and has represented a wide range of business entities, professionals, associations, and organizations in many civil disputes with varying levels of exposure, including wrongful death and brain injury cases. She is passionate about aggressively representing her clients, preparing the strongest defense available, and obtaining a case resolution that serves her clients' best interests.

As part of Deanna's commitment to giving back to the legal profession, she serves as a professor at Taft Law School to help future litigators become effective negotiators and valuable members of the legal community. She teaches Professional Responsibility and Alternative Dispute Resolution.

Deanna has a passion for learning and improving her own health and fitness, which led her to become a certified personal trainer, certified nutrition coach, certified instructor for kickboxing and weight lifting classes and earn certificates in fitness nutrition, nutrition counseling and weight loss.
